State Department of Education Reports “Adequate Yearly Progress” under NCLB

More than 80 percent of Connecticut’s elementary and middle schools analyzed for adequate yearly progress (AYP) under the federal No Child Left Behind law achieved this standard, based on results of the 2003 Connecticut Mastery Test (CMT). Of 806 such schools, 661 or 82 percent met the following standards:

- 65 percent of students must be proficient in mathematics on the CMT;
- 57 percent must be proficient in reading;
- 70 percent must be at or above the basic performance level in writing; and
- 95 percent must participate in the CMT testing.

These standards must be met by the whole school and by each subgroup of students (white, black, Hispanic, students with disabilities, English language learners and economically disadvantaged students) with at least 40 students in the subgroup.

Commissioner of Education Dr. Betty J. Sternberg said, “These are rigorous standards, and it is heartening that so many of our schools met them. However, it is absolutely critical that we focus our energy, passion and commitment on raising the achievement of all students in the 18 percent of schools (145) that did not make AYP, so every student has the opportunity for success.”

Dr. Sternberg continued, “Schools that did not make adequate yearly progress have challenging work ahead of them, and the State Department of Education has critical work to do in order to support them. We do this because ensuring that every student has the knowledge, skills and abilities to achieve at high levels is the right thing to do. It is especially important to work with schools where the inability to make adequate yearly progress has continued over time – our schools designated as in need of improvement.

“Our agency has already started this effort, establishing an accountability model for school improvement in partnership with district staff members statewide and national experts,” Commissioner Sternberg continued. “We had a very successful kick-off event on Wednesday, with approximately 450 district staff people attending.”

The foundation of this accountability model is teacher training and building-level and district-level leadership development which have student achievement at their core. Specifically, training and support will be provided to district-level and school-level improvement teams to ensure that staff members establish high standards for all students, use research-based teaching strategies, monitor student progress frequently, and provide effective and immediate interventions for students who are not performing at high levels.

The 145 elementary and middle schools that did not make AYP represent a slight decrease from the 149 schools so identified last year. (Also, 49 of last year’s identified schools did make AYP this year.) Of the 145, 97 have been identified as “in need of improvement,” which means that these schools have not made AYP for at least two consecutive years in the same content area. Of the 97 schools, 8 are now in their fourth year of identification as “in need of improvement.” As a result, during this school year they must plan for restructuring for the 2005-06 school year if they do not make adequate yearly progress in the next testing cycle (the 2004 CMT, administered during late September and early October of this year).

In addition, 122 of the 145 schools identified as not making AYP and 81 of the 97 schools identified as in need of improvement are schools receiving federal Title I funds. Title I schools are identified by the district based on poverty, educational need and availability of funds.

Seven schools have made “safe harbor.” This means that while they did not reach the proficiency targets in reading and mathematics, they did reach the “safe harbor” targets of 70 percent of students scoring above basic in writing and a 10 percent decrease in the number of students scoring below proficiency in reading and mathematics. Thus, they were not identified as failing to make AYP.

Schools did not make AYP for the following reasons:

Whole school math and reading academic achievement	38
Whole school math academic achievement	14
Whole school reading academic achievement	36
Subgroup math and reading academic achievement	27
Subgroup math academic achievement	13
Subgroup reading academic achievement	17

No schools were identified as failing to make adequate yearly progress for not reaching 95 percent participation, either by the whole school or by any subgroup. Last year, eight schools were identified for not reaching the participation standard.

Consequences

NCLB prescribes a variety of consequences for Title I schools that are identified as in need of improvement.

- Schools first identified as in need of improvement must develop a rigorous two-year school improvement plan in consultation with parents and school district staff members within 90 days of identification. The plan is submitted to the district leadership for review and to the local board of education for approval.
- The school improvement plan must be comprehensive, specific and focused primarily on the school's instructional program. It must target the school's greatest areas of academic deficiency and must be grounded in scientifically based research. Strategies must also include ways to promote parent involvement. As part of the plan, teachers must be provided with ongoing, high-quality training focused on core academic subjects and targeted to the school's greatest areas of need.

- In addition to developing a school improvement plan, schools must provide the opportunity for all eligible students in the school to transfer to another public school within the district that has not been identified as in need of improvement (see the attached chart showing school and district responsibilities).
- Eight schools in Connecticut are in their fourth year of identification as “in need of improvement.” These schools are required to plan for a major restructuring of the school in the event that they do not make adequate yearly progress this school year. The restructuring plan must reflect major fundamental reforms such as significant changes in the school’s staffing, leadership and governance (see the attached chart).

Additional Financial Support to Schools in Need of Improvement

The state will target $2 million in school improvement funds to districts in which the 8 schools that are in their fourth year designated as in need of improvement are located, and to the districts in which the 63 schools that are designated as in need of improvement at the whole school level are located.
